"For nine days now the sun-god Apollo has been showering arrows into our camp. Arrows of disease! This dreadful plague will continue until the beautiful Chryseis is returned to her home. King Agamemnon has ignored all the pleas of her father," said Calchas. "Apollo, the lord of the silver bow, grows angrier each day. For Chryseis is the daughter of a priest. A priest of the god Apollo!" King Agamemnon gripped the arms of his chair. "But Chryseis is a slave now, a prize of war! We raided many small cities for supplies to help us in our war against mighty Troy. Chryseis was taken along with weapons, cattle, and many prisoners," he scowled. "Am I to return her now? Am I to lose honor in the eyes of my men?" Then he looked long into the troubled faces of his officers.
